What is all this for?

Road to Nowhere is a Music Documentary about something we all go through. It is about those times in your life when you reach a crossroads where the things you used to do and think, that got you through, don't work anymore. When everything falls apart and you are trying to make sense of the pieces. When nothing feels right. When powerful questions plague your mind and answers don't seem to be forth-coming. And you are just floating ....

This is the story of award winning musician Johnathan Fleig at the lowest point in his life, working through struggles with career, marriage, friends and the death of his father, all at the same time. Filmed in cooperation with nature, the musical soundtrack was recorded live and outside in 8 beautiful locations all over Kansas. The music and inspired story telling provide an inside look at the creative process of an artist shifting from nowhere to nowhere.

Created by Brian D. Hardin with Jonathan Fleig on a shoestring budget, the film is proof that good story telling does not have to cost a lot of money. Filmmaker/Producer/Director Brian D. Hardin is great at creating an intimacy with the viewer. There is an immediate connection with Jonathan Fleig so much so that you feel like his best friend sitting in the passenger seat on his road from nowhere to nowhere.

The music adds a beautiful dimension. The songs get into the depth behind the words and interviews, taking you home, giving you time to reflect on the crossroads you have faced in your own life.
